The Survey Café, in the heart of old Bonita, takes its name from Bonita's history. In the 1870's, surveyors pitched camp near a medicinal spring, which the local Indians believed could heal the sick. The site became known as Survey, and the stream became known as Surveyor's Creek.

In 1912, a Developer named Ragsdale and a group of investors purchased 2400 acres around Survey. He and his associate, Dan Farnsworth, laid out a small town with streets named for potential buyers. They decided that the name Survey lacked sales appeal, so the town was renamed Bonita Springs, and Surveyor's Creek was renamed Imperial River.
